A Love Letter to the Rocky Mountain Conference

In the past few weeks, I have been listening. I have heard from many of you. I have had numerous conversations by Zoom, phone and email. Through all I have heard, it has become clear that I needed to write you all this love letter as a way to reflect out loud on all that I have been reflecting on within.

I have heard pain and anger from individuals who did not have a chance to say thank you to Rev. Artt and to celebrate a decade of mutual ministry with the Rocky Mountain Conference.

I have heard pain and anger from individuals who feel justice has not happened for Rev. Dr. Scott related to his departure last November from the Rocky Mountain Conference.

I have heard confusion from individuals who want to trust the process, but do not feel that they understand the entirety of the situation and want to know more. I have heard frustration that the Conference is not being transparent in sharing more details by practicing confidentiality on personnel and employment issues.

I have heard pain and withdrawing from individuals who have attempted to respond in some way and the responses back from others were such that they felt attacked, and, as one person said, abused, for trying to have a respectful conversation or offer a differing perspective. These people have all said they pulled back because it did not feel safe—that authentically sharing as a person of faith with their siblings in Christ in this environment is not a risk they are willing to take when it feels abusive.

People pulling back because they do not feel safe is the part of this that is the most painful for me. If, as people of faith, we cannot safely share and disagree with our siblings in Christ, who are we? We should have passion for what we believe is right and I know that the feelings within the many layers of this situation are real and justified. It shows care and deep faith. I hope and pray that this same care and deep faith will bring us to common ground and will be the light that can move us forward in a respectful way of compassion for one another.

Too many of those I have talked with feel that there nothing any of us can say or do that will bring healing and wholeness to this Conference because there are multiple perspectives demanding theirs is the only way forward and no one can be trusted unless we agree with them 100%. What is happening in our Conference mirrors what is happening in our society as a whole. As people of faith we say we want to offer an alternative to the all or nothing way of reacting but to say that means we have to recognize it when it is happening in our own circle. Can we find a way to love one another even as we may disagree with one another? This is our chance. It will not happen overnight. It will take hard work and it will require ALL of us to be part of the solution—working together with clarity, kindness, respect and open ears and hearts.

While there are many things that this entire situation has uncovered that are layers deep and will require time and a deep commitment of all of us to make a difference, there is one thing that we first need to resolve in order to be ready to take the next step forward. That, of course, is finding a resolution over the issues involving Rev. Dr. Scott.

Many of you have seen the letter that was sent by two of our congregations asking churches to defer OCWM giving to the Conference in order to set it aside in case the Conference cannot reach a resolution with Dr. Scott related to his separation from the Conference. There are many narratives that are circulating about why this step was needed, including that the Conference Board of Directors is not willing to give him severance. The narrative that the Board is not willing to reach an agreement is not true. The willingness was there on the day of Dr. Scott's release and is still there. As evidence of this I want you to know that I have been directed by the Board to lead a team helping us figure out how to move to a resolution and we are eager to resolve this in a way that is just for everyone involved.

For those who are considering responding to the letter by withholding OCWM giving, I want to offer a request and a caution. Like many of you, I would prefer a resolution sooner rather than later. However, my request is that you fully allow us to directly handle a resolution with Dr. Scott. We covet your prayers for all involved and hope you will encourage him to work with us for the best solution. The first step of healing for the entire Conference is that the Conference as a whole, not individual churches, complete this process in a way that is just and fair.

The caution I offer is twofold. One, the conversation about withholding money is impeding a resolution. I get that it has been many months so the urgency that is being felt now is real and that is why the letter has been released. I really do understand. And the best outcome is, still, for this to happen as a Conference instead of coming from a group of individual churches. The second caution is related to this. Should any giving from individual churches be unilaterally given to Dr. Scott, there could be unintended consequences for churches that are pledging money and for all parties involved in the transaction. There are complicated rules around how payments are characterized for tax purposes, especially for churches, and we don't want churches to run into complications with the IRS. The best outcome for all of us is for Rev. Dr. Scott and the Conference to reach a resolution together.

I wish I could answer all the questions. I cannot. I often say that there are always two sides to any story. That is true in this case as well. I have accepted the role as your Bridge Conference Minister without bias towards any side of this story. My time with you is short and will not be impacted by our success or failure in healing and charting a new direction for this conference. However, my love for the UCC and all of its people and churches compels me to use this bridge position to help you start that journey.

Yes, I have been listening. I will go so far to say there are not just two sides to this story but there are dozens of sides. It is a sacred blessing to really listen and be invited to hold the grief and pain that our siblings experience. We have the gift in this moment to BE the church. I will continue to listen with an open heart, and I hope and pray you all will join me as well.

Blessings,

Rev. Dr. Diane Weible, Bridge Conference Minister
